Connecticut Remains Second-To-Last

Financial State of Connecticut

Connecticut's financial condition improved in 2022, but the state still needed $68.6 billion to pay its bills. Based upon the state's latest audited financial report for fiscal year 2022, it had a Taxpayer BurdenTM of $50,700, earning it an "F" grade from Truth in Accounting.

Like many states in this year's report, Connecticut's economic condition improved due to federal funding for COVID relief and increased tax collections attributed to taxpayers' pent-up tourism and purchasing demands. However, unfunded pensions and other employee retirement obligations continued to plague the state.

Over the last two years, the value of Connecticut's pension investments has been subject to the volatility of the markets. In 2021, financial markets improved, and the state's pension system's investments reported significant gains. Unfortunately, the market conditions turned negative during fiscal year 2022, resulting in significant investment losses, which in turn caused the amount of unfunded promised pension benefits to increase. This volatility highlights the risk to pension systems and taxpayers when fixed benefits are partially funded by earnings from erratic markets.

The data included in this report is derived from Connecticut's 2022 audited Annual Comprehensive Financial Report and retirement plans' reports. To compare prior years and other states' financial, demographic, and economic information, go to Data-Z.org.

Connecticut's Financial Breakdown

- Connecticut had $22.9 billion available to pay $91.5 billion worth of bills.
- The outcome was a $68.6 billion shortfall, which breaks down to a burden of $50,700 per taxpayer.
- Connecticut's overall financial condition improved. Its tax revenues were up significantly, but it still did not have enough money to pay its bills. However, the state has no counties to share public services creating a higher burden for the state.
