Financial State of Fresno, CA

Fresno’s healthy financial condition helped the city weather the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic. Based upon the city’s fiscal year 2020 audited financial report, Fresno had a Taxpayer Surplus™ of $1,300, earning it a “B” grade from Truth in Accounting.

Unlike most cities, Fresno had more than enough resources available, $224.7 million, to pay all of its bills, including public employees’ retirement benefits. This means Fresno’s elected officials truly balanced their budgets. When broken down, the amount available to pay future bills resulted in a surplus of $1,300 for each Fresno taxpayer.

Even though Fresno was financially sound before and during the pandemic, the city still received federal support from COVID-19 related grants. The surplus Fresno had plus additional funds from the grants will help the city to weather any future public health or economic crises and downturns in the market, which can cause the value of a government’s assets to fluctuate. The uncertainty surrounding this current crisis makes it impossible to determine how much will be needed to maintain government services and benefits.

The data included in this report is derived from the city of Fresno’s 2020 audited Annual Comprehensive Financial Report and retirement plans’ reports. To compare prior years and other city financial, demographic, and economic information go to Data-Z.org.

Fresno’s Financial Breakdown

Fast Facts

- Fresno had $853.4 million available to pay $628.7 million worth of bills.
- The outcome was a $224.7 million surplus, which breaks down to $1,300 per taxpayer.
- Fresno’s overall financial condition decreased by more than $165 million largely because the city’s pension plan earned less than favorable investment income.
