

Delaware Still in Bottom 10

Financial State of Delaware

Delaware's financial condition worsened in 2022, leaving the state with insufficient money to pay its bills. The shortfall amounted to $6.9 billion. Based upon the state's latest audited financial report for fiscal year 2022, it had a Taxpayer Burden™ of $18,900, earning it a "D" grade from Truth in Accounting.

Like many states, Delaware's economic condition improved due to federal funding for COVID relief and increased tax collections attributed to taxpayers' pent-up tourism and purchasing demands. However, unfunded retirement obligations continue to plague Delaware's ability to pay its bills.

Over the last two years, the value of Delaware's pension investments has been subject to the volatility of the markets. In 2021 financial markets improved and the state's pension investments reported significant gains. Unfortunately, market conditions turned negative during fiscal year 2022, resulting in significant unrealized investment losses which in turn caused the amount of unfunded promised pension benefits to increase. This volatility highlights the risk to pension systems and taxpayers of fixed benefits that are partially funded by earnings from erratic markets.

The data included in this report is derived from Delaware's 2022 audited Annual Comprehensive Financial Report and retirement plans' reports. To compare prior years and other states' financial, demographic, and economic information, go to Data-Z.org.
