Financial State of Detroit

After the Covid-pandemic, in large part due to unrealized gains in stock market valuation of its pension investments and federal government stimulus money, Detroit's financial condition appeared to improve. Despite apparent improvements, Detroit had a Taxpayer Burden™ of $4,400, earning it a "C" grade from Truth in Accounting.

The city's pension liability is calculated by subtracting earned and promised benefits from the market value of pension assets. Based on an exceptionally good year in the markets in 2021, the pension assets' values were high. The result was a dramatic decrease in Detroit's pension liability and a corresponding decrease in its money needed to pay bills. Even with inflated pension asset values, the city had set aside only 76 cents for every dollar of promised pension benefits.

Detroit's elected officials have repeatedly made financial decisions that left the city with a debt burden of $901.3 million. That burden came to $4,400 for every city taxpayer. Detroit's financial problems stem mostly from unfunded retirement obligations that have accumulated over the years. In 2022, markets produced negative market returns and federal COVID relief waned. These conditions may increase the per taxpayer Tax Burden. Detroit could struggle to maintain current levels of government services and benefits without further negative impact on its financial health.

The data included in this report is derived from Detroit's 2021 audited Annual Comprehensive Financial Report and retirement plans' reports. To compare prior years and other cities' financial, demographic, and economic information, go to Data-Z.org.
