

THE FINANCIAL STATE OF LEXINGTON

Truth in Accounting's (TIA) new city report ranks and grades the 75 most populous cities in the United States by their financial health. Lexington ranks No. 44, earning it a "D" on TIA's grading scale.

Decisions by city officials have left the city with a debt burden of $519.9 million, according to TIA's analysis of the city's 2016 financial filings. That burden equates to $5,800 for every Lexington taxpayer.

Lexington's financial problems are largely driven by entitlement obligations in the form of pension benefits. The city has $319.1 million in unfunded pension promises and $242.2 million in unfunded retiree healthcare benefits. While Lexington has promised these benefits, little money has been set aside to fund them.

These statistics are jarring, but what's also alarming is that city government officials continue to hide significant amounts of retirement debt from their balance sheets, despite new rules to increase financial transparency. This skewed financial data gives residents a false impression of their city's overall financial health.
