Financial State of North Dakota

North Dakota's healthy financial condition helped the state move forward in a positive direction post-Covid. Based upon the state's latest audited financial report for the fiscal year 2021, North Dakota had a Taxpayer Surplus[™] of $49,600, earning it an "A" grade from Truth in Accounting.

Unlike most states, even with the challenges of the Covid pandemic North Dakota had more than enough resources available, including a surplus of $13.7 billion, to pay all of its bills. This includes public employees' retirement benefits. Notably, like most states in this year's report, some of North Dakota's economic condition improved only on paper due to stock market increases in 2021. However, these increases are transitory as financial markets are volatile, and the gains recorded previously may not have been realized through the actual sale of the market assets. Therefore, the report is expected to look different next year when the market decreases are reflected in North Dakota's annual statements.

Even though North Dakota was financially sound before and during the pandemic, the state still received federal support from COVID-19 related grants, which contributed to the continuing financial health of this state. The uncertainty surrounding the full economic recovery post-Covid makes it impossible to determine how much will be needed to maintain government services and benefits in the coming years. However, the surplus North Dakota had, and additional funds, will help the state weather any future public health or economic crises and downturns in the market.

The data included in this report is derived from the State of North Dakota's 2021 audited Annual Comprehensive Financial Report and retirement plans' reports. To compare state financial, demographic and economic information go to Data-Z.org.
