THE FINANCIAL STATE OF ST. LOUIS

Truth in Accounting's (TIA) new city report ranks and grades the 75 most populous cities in the United States by their financial health. St. Louis ranks No. 66, earning it a "D" on TIA's grading scale.

Repeated decisions by city officials have left the city with a debt burden of $1.6 billion, according to TIA's analysis of its 2016 financial filings. That burden equates to $16,500 for every St. Louis taxpayer.

St. Louis's financial problems are largely driven by long-term debt and entitlement obligations in two categories: pensions and retiree healthcare benefits. The city has $648.7 million in unfunded pension promises and $502 million in unfunded retiree healthcare benefits. While St. Louis has promised these benefits, little money has been set aside to fund them.

These statistics are jarring, but what's also alarming is that city government officials continue to hide significant amounts of retirement debt from their balance sheets, despite new rules to increase financial transparency. This skewed financial data gives residents a false impression of their city's overall financial health.
